MINISTRY HIGHLIGHT

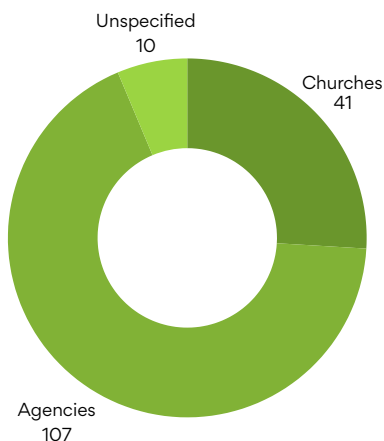

A couple at the Breathe conference struggled with guilt that their lives were not as clean-cut as they believed Global Workers' should be. No matter what they tried, they couldn't rise above the messiness of life in an extreme setting with three little ones. As they shared their feelings and fears, connected with other parents on the field, and heard talks addressing their exact worries, they realized they were working for God rather than with Him, and in doing so were defining their relationship as transactional rather than relational. Over those 10 days, their relief was visible; a weight lifted. They now have new eyes to see a God who delights in them more than He requires them to meet a particular missionary standard.
